

An innovative hospital pioneers a leadership-development track for their residents, using the FranklinCovey All Access Pass®.

Hospital

Challenge

One of the most prestigious institutions in medicine wanted to train their residents to be not only clinicians, but also leaders. The problem was they couldn't find a curriculum that developed leadership continually over three years of residency and had the executive-level quality the residents expected.

Solution

After attending a FranklinCovey culture event, the hospital's director of medical education enlisted the FranklinCovey All Access Pass® to develop the physician leadership program they envisioned.

The resulting program is a three-year path for all hospital residents:

- In their first year, residents learn to manage themselves and collaborate through The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People®.
- The second year, they dive into The 5 Choices to Extraordinary Productivity® to handle their growing responsibilities without burning out.
- The third year, residents prepare to launch their careers and lead practices with The Speed of Trust®.

Residents begin each year with a full day of FranklinCovey content, followed by a day of practicing the habits in medical simulations. Residents sustain their learning by facilitating FranklinCovey InSights®—short, video-based eLearning modules—and Jhana leadership articles during biweekly case presentations. The FranklinCovey consultants customized their delivery to the residents' specific challenges in a hospital setting.

With their All Access Pass, the residency program added Presentation Advantage® to improve communication skills: speaking with other doctors during rounds, giving formal presentations, or delivering bad news to a parent. They created a presentation series modeled after TED Talks in which residents develop their skills and receive feedback from faculty.

Results

Pre- and post-assessments show improvement in confidence and self-efficacy, with excellent feedback from the residents. The director of medical education sees an improved level of maturity among graduating residents. When residents face leadership and communication challenges, they have a solid foundation to address them.
